McLean's "Motivation" doc is the most predictable story that can be told about motivation.
The main message from this research is that motivation is not a single entity, but rather a complex interaction between internal and external factors.
Internal factors include personal beliefs, values, and goals, while external factors include social support, feedback, and rewards.
The research also found that motivation is not a static state, but rather a dynamic process that is influenced by various factors over time.
